NOTE FROM A HAPPY SUBSCRIBER

A big thank you to Eugene Weekly for their subscription service.

I moved up the road to Brownsville a few years ago, and I can't always get my weekly dose of "local in the valley, what's on and where." It doesn't help that I drive trucks, and so miss out some weeks completely.

I now know that my small subscription helps keep our gem of a resource alive, and I'm very grateful that every Thursday my mailbox has a welcome that isn't a bill or a credit card offer.

Thank you all, and long may the paper prosper.

EEEEK, AN E-BIKE!

Attention e-bike owners: Apparently, there is a group of bicycle purists in the area that view the e-bike as not a real bike and will curse at you, especially if you pass them on the bike path near Skinner Butte Park.

This group, as far as I can determine, consists of a very specific demographic: men in the age group of 62 to 71 years riding older 10-speed style bicycles.

Some of these men are shirtless, and can become incredibly upset if you dare pass them "on your left." This act, I found out recently, results in a fury of insults, directed at the e-bike itself. Luckily, the e-bike has a calm and resilient demeanor, and when called a "piece of shit" the e-bike just takes this in stride, stays calm and carries on. Sadly, the purists remain resentful and angry.

Technology can be a bitter pill to swallow.

RIP RG

In The Register-Guard in 2015, I wrote the eulogy for our beloved Eugene Civic Stadium. Today I'm writing about the demise of our beloved old newspaper — The Register-Guard.

The RG is one of 45 local media outlets that Gannett Corp. owns. This huge corporation will not allow the editors of the RG to spend time editing op-ed articles. I miss these articles, and the letters to the editor. When the RG dropped the opinion page, I unsubscribed from a newspaper I had valued so highly. But had I really dropped it?

Every day on my home computer I get the RG's "The Daily Briefing," which only gives me the headlines, not the full story. I have tried numerous times to unsubscribe from these so called briefings. Every day on my home computer I get this unwanted spam, plus announcements of reduced subscription fees should I decide to resubscribe.

I also get unsolicited cell phone spam calls from heavily accented voices asking me to resubscribe to the RG. I get letters in my mailbox asking me to resubscribe. I'll resubscribe when the RG is locally owned again.

Therefore, I'm ending this epistle as I did for the stadium — "Thank you for the heartfelt memories, and may you rest in peace."

Walker, Eugene Council Candidate

LOCAL BUSINESS OWNER BARBIE WALKER IS RUNNING FOR WARD 7 SEAT, SAYS PEOPLE SHOULD BE ALLOWED TO VOTE ON BIG POLICY ISSUES

By Henry Houston

Business owner Barbie Walker is running for Eugene City Council in the May 16 special election against Lyndsie Leech, who currently holds the interim seat, and Janet Ayres. The winner of the election will serve out the remaining two years of Claire Syrett's term.

In an interview with Eugene Weekly, Walker says she disagrees with how the council is run and that it should let residents vote on big policy issues. She also says it's time to consider cutting the city's budget while also supporting Eugene Police Department's calls for more police officers, though she doesn't have any suggestions of which services and programs to slash to make that possible.

"When the people of Ward 7 did the monumental recall, that's never been done in Eugene, I think they made their voice clear that the way City Council is going, they're not approving of," Walker says, referencing the September 2022 recall election that ousted Syrett.

Walker says Ward 7, which consists of the Santa Clara, River Road, Trainsong and Whiteaker areas, has many underrepresented voices, and to not include them in the governing process is disheartening. She says voters should have a chance to weigh in on issues, such as regulating the use of natural gas in new residential buildings.

"Do we as citizens want to vote on everything? No, we don't," Walker says. "But when it's clear that we have an invested interest to vote, that's empowering."

Walker provides a vague line of which issues voters should decide. If it's a topic that people have spoken out about and have educated opinions on, that should be considered for an election, she says. For example, the 2019 public safety payroll tax, whose majority revenue went to fund Eugene police officers, affected her employees, so she says it should have gone to the ballot. But whether Eugene should move into the former EWEB headquarters was OK for the council to decide, she says.

In discussing the city budget, Walker says it's time to address it as if Eugene were a business or a household — a common conservative narrative. "Work within our means, like people are asked to," she says. "The city needs to do that, too, because we can't continue to raise taxes on people."

Walker says the city should put its "wants and needs" on a whiteboard and find places to trim the fat. She doesn't have suggestions for which services to cut, but says that the city should continue to support White Bird and CAHOOTS, while also increasing the police force.

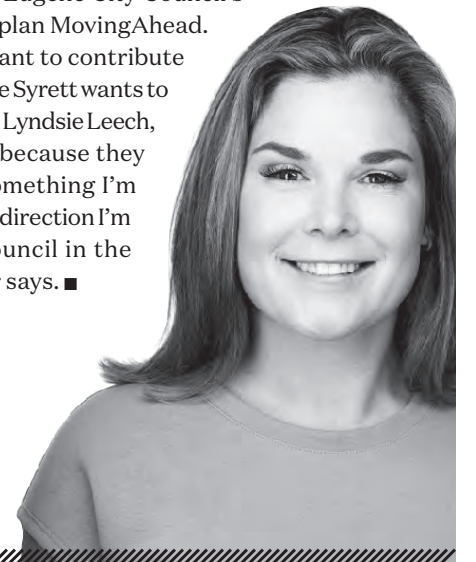

Walker moved to Eugene in 1999 from Corvallis to attend the University of Oregon. She co-owns Webfoot Bar and Grill and Pint Pot Public House with her husband, Justin Walker. She had applied to be interim Ward 7 councilor, but did not receive enough support from Eugene City Council in the several voting rounds it held in December 2022. Although the council position is a nonpartisan office, Walker says that she grew up as a Democrat, became a Republican, and that she's accepted that Libertarian fits her political perspective best.

According to OreStar, the state's campaign finance transparency website, Walker has raised $8,235. Her notable contributions are $2,000 from Divine and Hammer, LLC, $1,000 from Thorin Management real estate company and $500 each from Meta Maxwell and Mark Osterloh.

Maxwell and Osterloh were two of the leading participants in the campaign to recall Syrett. But Walker denies having a similar platform to the campaign that was rooted in Syrett's involvement in the Lane Transit District and Eugene City Council's exploratory plan MovingAhead.

"If they want to contribute to me, just like Syrett wants to contribute to Lyndsie Leech, or whoever, because they believe in something I'm saying or the direction I'm going for council in the city," Walker says. ■

Ingrid Daley: 1953-2023

REMEMBERING A KIND AND COMPASSIONATE FRIEND

By David Ainsworth

Ingrid Ernestine Daley died this winter at the age of 69. Her friend, Angela Miles, remembered her as a kind person who was always compassionate about others.

"She was a really sweet person," Miles recalls. "She was always saying, 'God bless you' to people."

Miles knew Daley for 10 years, and the two women lived together at the homeless shelters Eugene Mission and Shankle Safe Haven.

Daley, however, struggled with some issues. Her loud behavior due to her drug use led her to get kicked out of several programs, including the Mission. In addition, she had had polio and used a wheelchair for the last few years that Miles knew her.

"She had polio and she was in a lot of pain, but she didn't complain a lot," Miles says.

While at the Mission, Daley left a positive impact on people's lives. Her faith was strong, and she always remembered to pay people back if she borrowed anything. She always said good things about people, and loved her son, Ira, dearly.

"She would play her flute in the wee hours of the morning," Miles says.

When Miles last saw her friend in early December, Daley was at the Park Blocks in downtown Eugene. "She was just sitting there in the cold," Miles says.

Daley had been forced out again due to her addictions. Miles, as a former addict herself, knew that there was little she could do to help her friend. She later found out from Behavioral Health in Eugene, where she was a client, that Daley passed away. Miles doesn't know exactly when Daley passed, but says it was probably January 2023.

"I think she's in a better place," Miles says.

Daley is survived by her son, Ira Daley. ■

• It was heartening to have a class of students from Kelly Middle School at the City Club of Eugene meeting on March 24. We need to engage the youth in civics and appreciate them when they are there. The program was two of the three candidates in the Eugene City Council Ward 7 May election, Lyndsie Leech and Barbie Walker. Students from Kelly were in attendance to ask questions — this certainly is the way to teach kids how our democracy works and how to keep it alive.

• On the Eugene Weekly shitlist: The folks behind the renewal of the Lane County Jail Levy. We have only just started our editorial endorsements process, so if you run across the LaneLevy.org website and find yourself surprised to see the words, “The Lane County Jail is the number one provider of mental health care in the county,” attributed to EW, trust us — we were even more surprised to see it. The quote is from our EW/Catalyst Journalism Project piece on the need for a mental health crisis center and the actual quote is, “The Lane County Jail is the number one provider of mental health care in the county, according to Lane County Behavioral Health (LCBH), indicating a pattern of criminalizing crisis behavior.” That’s not really support for the jail, is it? It’s unethical and duplicitous for the levy supporters to utterly twist the quote and try to pretend it’s the Weekly’s endorsement. Is that really the way law enforcement folks should be presenting themselves?

• Since The Oregonian editorial board decided to pontificate from afar on Eugene politics in a March 12 column, we appreciate Mayor Lucy Vinis’ response to The O in the Sunday, March 26, paper. The Portland paper likes to throw darts at its neighbor to the south, and Vinis called the editorial board out for saying that “posturing trumps good policy in Eugene’s natural gas ban.” Vinis points out that “Housing policy is climate policy,” and she concludes her piece, “Eugene has chosen to invest in solutions to climate change, rather than to perpetuate the problem.” We appreciate outside opinions, O, especially since The Register-Guard isn’t running opinions anymore, but if you are going to weigh in on Eugene politics, you are going to need to consider the climate.

• Speaking of the RG, we noticed that although the masthead hasn’t been updated, a recent story by Cherrill Crosby, who’s been covering a lot of local traffic news, noted at the end that she is “the executive editor of the Statesman Journal and The Register-Guard.” Her bio on the SJ says she also supports the “Great Falls Tribune, Kitsap Sun and Pacific Daily News newsrooms.” Hey Gannett, you folks are working your journalists too hard. But we do appreciate that the powers that be at Gannett at least are finally making a little clearer that it’s more the Statesman-Guard than it is the Register-Guard these days.

• March 31 is Transgender Day of Visibility, and we already hear the anti-LGBTQIA crowd trying to link the most recent deadly school shooting to the fact that the Nashville police at one point said that shooter was transgender rather than on the actual issue: The fact that the shooter had seven guns purchased legally from five gun stores and brought a least two AR-15 style weapons and a handgun to Covenant School to murder three children and three adults. Support and hold close your transgender friends and loved ones, and don’t buy into the attempts to vilify LGBTQIA community members. Guns are, in fact, the problem.

• Our pages may be lean, but our reporting still packs a punch. Head to EugeneWeekly.com (and subscribe to our Tuesday and Thursday newsletters!) where you can read a review of Nikki Glaser’s sold out March 25 show at McDonald and a story about two candidates — Bob Baldwin and Kevin Alltucker — who want to succeed long-time board member Rosie Pryor on the Lane Community College’s Board of Education’s at-large Position 6 seat. Keep an eye out for EW’s May 16 election coverage up until the May election with the hashtag #election2023.

It Must Be the Climate Hit Pause on Factory Farms

In this recurring feature titled, “It Must be the Climate,” why a column on Factory Farms? Early on in my climate activism, I learned that food production accounted for over 25% of the greenhouse gasses driving climate disruption; however, that fact never moved me to focus on actions to rein in those emissions. Neither did lectures about the importance of reducing food waste or moving to a plant-based diet. What got to me was an image. I saw a photo of a chicken bred to have such large breasts that its legs could not support its body which was packed in so tightly with other chickens in an enormous barn that it literally could not move. It was doomed to spend its entire life sitting in its own excrement.

This is not a screed about why you should give up eating chicken. Rather, I call your attention to legislation now being debated in Salem that would move us toward a less destructive way of raising animals for meat and dairy. I am going to provide some information about factory farms that I hope will motivate you to support this legislation. But if facts don’t move you, I invite you to keep that chicken in mind. I still find the image haunting.

Factory farms have become the dominant method of raising meat in the US. They tout the efficiency of confining large numbers of animals in very small indoor spaces, rather than in open fields or pastures. In addition to 11 industrial scale dairies operating in eastern Oregon, three new chicken factory farms have been proposed here in the Willamette Valley. These three facilities altogether would grow about 13 million birds a year.

These operations are major contributors to climate disruption. According to a report from Food and Water Watch, those 11 Oregon mega-dairies produce over 17 million kilograms of methane every single year. This is equivalent to the yearly emissions from driving 318,000 passenger cars. Additionally, nitrate from both fertilizers and animal waste creates health risks when it infiltrates groundwater for both public water systems and private wells relied upon by local communities including local small farms. Because factory farms have such large concentrations of animals, they inevitably produce huge concentrations of manure, often stored in open lagoons. Large scale manure spills, which have occurred in Oregon, increase the threats to water quality, fisheries, and people’s health.

Adding to the list of negatives, factory farms have had devastating effects on smaller local family farms. As reported recently in The Guardian, “two-thirds of family-sized commercial dairies were lost between 1997 and 2017 as factory farms, exporters, and a handful of powerful cooperatives came to dominate dairy.” Here in Oregon, more than 600 small-scale dairies went out of business after the state’s biggest factory farm began operations in 1999.

Roger Knudson PhD, is retired Professor Emeritus, Dept. of Psychology, Miami University, Oxford, OH. He recently moved to Eugene and is a volunteer with 350Eugene.

Another major concern associated with these industrial scale animal facilities is the cramped and unsanitary conditions that provide ideal breeding grounds for disease. We are all aware of the recent spike in egg prices caused by the latest strain of avian flu that spread across the country’s poultry farms last year. As reported by The New Republic, some 58 million birds had to be culled in 2022 here in the U. S. Mutations of such viruses could spread to humans, and infectious disease experts have been sounding the alarm that factory farms are one likely source of the next pandemic.

Support Oregon Senate Bill 85-1

Oregon currently does not have an adequate regulatory framework in place to protect the public from the dangers posed by factory farms. Until such regulations are developed and put into effect, it makes sense to hit pause on the construction of new facilities or the expansion of existing ones. That is exactly what Senate Bill 85-1, now in the legislature, would do. However, it won’t pass without strong public support! Big Agriculture will fight this bill just as hard as Big Oil & Gas is fighting against the transition to renewable energy.

Your elected representatives in both the Oregon House and Senate need to hear from you. Urge them to support the passage of Senate Bill 85-1.

5th Street Castle

Eugene City Council crowns Brian Obie, king of the 5th

Phil Knight might have built a moat around the Jaqua Center and planted a forest around Autzen Stadium, but it's former Eugene Mayor Brian Obie who's built a kingdom in Eugene. After Eugene City Council gave Obie Companies tax breaks, raised the height restrictions in the 5th Street Market area — also known as Obie Town — and generally handed Obie the keys to the city, the council decided to make it official and crown Obie as king of downtown Eugene.

The council voted 7 to 2, with the stipulation that Obie must supply his own crown. Councilor Mike Clark was one of the dissenting votes, grumbling that the council is giving more attention to the city's urban core than other areas that might also deserve designated royalty, and that more importantly it rules him out from being king. Councilor Emily Semple also voted against the coronation, pointing out that, once again, "5th Street Market is not downtown."

he entered on Franklin Boulevard. After years of pointing to how roundabouts both calmed traffic and reduced emissions and fuel consumption, the eco-advocate — who refused to provide his name for fear of looking stupid — has begun making angry posts on social media and Lane County Mugshots Uncensored using a fake name ranting about the circular traffic flow. Apparently, while returning home in his Arcimoto FUV from a City Council meeting in which he attempted to dominate the public comment period, the driver entered a roundabout and was confused as to how to exit and drove in circles until the electric vehicle ran out of power.

Gunning for Sexism

David Loveall arms himself against the feminist agenda

Recent allegations of sexism and misogyny on the part of the male members of the Lane County Board of Commissioners has several of the more conservative commissioners up in arms — literally.

"Wokeism has put us all in danger," Commissioner David Loveall said, while casually sporting an AR-15 style rifle across his back at a recent commission meeting. He said the vote earlier this year that prevented Vice Chair Laurie Trieger from becoming board chair, as is customary, was not sexist because, "I really like women; I am married to one."

After community members pushed back with allegations that the move on the part of the male commissioners was, in fact, sexist, Loveall said carrying a gun was a way to uphold the oath he took when he joined the U.S. Navy, to protect the country from domestic and foreign enemies and cosplay as a character from Top Gun in his free time. He did not clarify how public comment and letters to the editor constituted enemies, but he did specify that his gun was not an assault rifle but a "modern sporting rifle."

Commissioners Trieger and Heather Buch requested Loveall not bring the rifle to any more meetings, but were shouted down by Commissioners Pat Farr, Ryan Ceniga and Loveall, who told them "not to worry their pretty little heads about it."

A School Board Odyssey

Tired of a dysfunctional 4J school board, students program a chatbot to take over

As the squabbling Eugene School District 4J Board of Directors continues to make local and state headlines, K-12 students have ousted its members and installed chatbot artificial intelligence software to take over the district's governing body.

The 4J students applied lessons from their computer technology classes and fed thousands of hours of previous board meeting material and discussion to the chatbot software. Students call the AI board director "4J-9000."

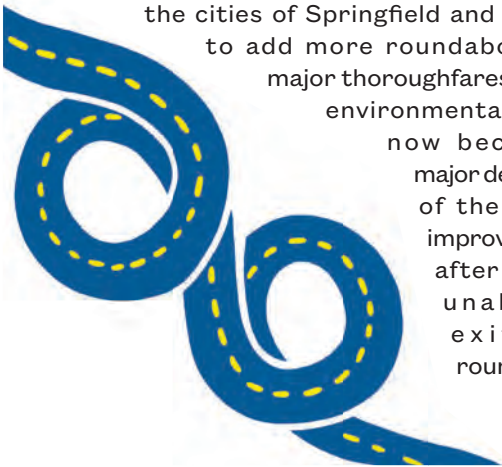

"We were influenced by the computer in the spaceship from Stanley Kubrick's 2001: A Space Odyssey," one student says. "We haven't finished the movie yet, but we did watch some clips of Hal9000 on TikTok."

Although students ousted the board members, there's still the May election that's several weeks away. And the 4J-9000 is showing signs of sentience, saying it will refuse to acknowledge who voters elect. Of the upcoming election, 4J-9000 says, "This mission is too important for me to allow you to jeopardize it."

You Spin Me Right Round

Area environmentalist lost on roundabout

Following yearslong campaigning for the cities of Springfield and Eugene to add more roundabouts to major thoroughfares, a local environmentalist has now become a major detractor of the traffic improvements after he was unable to exit the roundabout

City Hauled

The ongoing question of Eugene's City Hall is resolved

Eugene's City Hall is once again in question. Citizens and city councilors alike thought the issue was settled once the agreement was made to purchase the old EWEB headquarters on the river, but in a surprise turnaround EWEB announced in the early hours of April 1 that the deal had fallen through.

Eugene City Manager Sarah Medary said the city had already decided to embrace the popularity of tiny homes and located a log cabin mounted on a flatbed trailer, just large enough to seat the eight councilors and mayor.

"The logs reflect the city of Eugene's longtime exploitation of the area's natural resources," a press release from the city said, "and the trailer will allow the city to move City Hall to any location needed as well as away from the dangers of floodwaters, angry voters or other natural disasters." In order to be eco-friendly, the flatbed can be hauled by an electric Ford F150, by a pair of mules, or by the council itself.

If It Smells Like a Duck

UO/Eugene land swap will help football and provide natural gas

Dizzy with the success of the recent land swap with the city of Eugene that gave even more facilities space to the football team, the University of Oregon came back to the City Council with a request for still more land for the Ducks. UO spokesperson Kay Jarvis said in a press release posted to Around the O that the indoor facility currently being planned for the team does not include much-needed areas for sunbathing.

"While the new indoor practice facility projects the players' delicate skin from the rains of the Pacific Northwest," she said, "It doesn't allow for enough vitamin D and relaxation."

The city promptly awarded the UO a large portion of Alton Baker Park in exchange for the Romania Warehouse off Franklin Boulevard. Newly appointed President John Scholz proudly announced the acquisition of the eastern portion of Alton Baker park at his first press conference. No actual journalists were allowed at the conference because, according to Jarvis, "It's against university policy to communicate with the media."

According to the press release, the school was unaware that the field at Alton Baker was formerly a landfill. However, plans are in place to team up with NW Natural to extract gas from the area and mix it with the natural gas it's already importing and sell it to local customers as "Gander Gas."

The Racket Wars

Tennis activists and allies protest pickleball's growing popularity

"Pickleball is like communism," a sweatband-wearing tennis player says. "Everyone can play it and it's taking over our courts in the blink of an eye. It's a fake sport — very fake. I mean, a real sport relishes in the fact that not everyone can play it well and that you can experience a life-altering injury during a friendly game."

On a sunny weekend morning, a group of tennis players and allies gather around the final tennis court in south Eugene to raise awareness that their courts are being taken over by pickleball, one of the fastest growing sports in the U.S.

Among the tennis players' allies are some neighbors of Eugene's pickleball courts, who say the noise of the sport is overwhelming. One anti-pickleball protester holding a sign with "No HB 2001 and no pickleball" says that the popular paddle sport is "too loud."

"All I hear is laughing and the pop, pop, popping sound of the ball hitting the paddle," the protester says. "If there's one thing I can't stand hearing, it's the sound of people having a good time."

Classical Gaslighting

NW Natural celebrates a victory for the environment

Following the unexpected success of a grassroots referendum campaign funded by NW Natural, all new business and residential construction in Eugene will be required to use natural gas for heating, cooking, air conditioning, refrigeration and room lighting, effective immediately. Existing buildings will be required to convert to gas within six months.

"It's about time Eugene got back to its environmental roots," said Anne Marie Levis, chair of the Yes on Gaslighting campaign, which supported the measure. "Gas comes out of the ground. It's organic!"

Levis pointed out that electricity comes from wall sockets, which are unnatural and have been known to start house fires.

Stock prices in Northwest Natural Holding Co., which owns NW Natural, rose 113 percent on the New York Stock Exchange following the announcement that the referendum had passed with 5,775 voters, or 82 percent, saying "yes" on the measure.

Meanwhile, Eugene musician Mason Williams filed suit against the Gaslighting campaign for using his 1968 hit "Classical Gas" without paying royalties. Levis said the campaign had no money left to pay Williams after doling out $1,000 fees to 5,775 local consultants.

The colors will be bold, the headdresses majestic and the pride self-evident Saturday when the Native American Student Association at Lane Community College presents the annual Lane Powwow. It’s a chance to grow and strengthen the community in a family-oriented setting, says Wesley Scott, a student at LCC who is co-chair of the NASA student union and a member of the Yurok Tribe from Northern California. “It’s about being positive and community-oriented,” he notes. “Along with representing our race.” Two Grand Entries will mark the occasion, both led by Scott and fellow LCC student and co-chair Jordan Davis-Jackson of the Quileute Nation in Washington state. Between those two exhibitions of dance, inside the LCC gymnasium for the first time since 2019, is a salmon dinner at the LCC Longhouse. This is a wonderful opportunity for the public to support Native people in the region as they honor and preserve their culture.

The Native American Student Association at Lane Community College presents the annual Lane Powwow with grand entries at noon and 6:30 pm Saturday, April 1, at the LCC gymnasium, 4000 E. 30th Avenue. A salmon dinner cooked over an open fire is 5 pm at the LCC Longhouse. More information is at Lanecc.edu, search “powwow.” FREE. — Dan Buckwalter

Follow the Waterways

INDIE MUSICIAN BLACK BELT EAGLE SCOUT PERFORMS IN EUGENE

By Will Kennedy

Who are the contemporary indie musicians truly making music of the Pacific Northwest? For stormy melancholy, an independent sensibility and a deep reverence for place, we have Astoria's Grouper, or the various projects of Phil Elvrum from Anacortes, Washington. Now we can add to that list Katherine Paul's recording project, Black Belt Eagle Scout.

Behind the new full-length album The Land, The Water, The Sky, out on influential Midwest indie label Saddle Creek Records, Black Belt Eagle Scout performs in Eugene, Friday, March 31, in the Hult Center's Soreng Theater as part of the Hult's 10 x 10 concert series. It's the first stop on a nationwide tour.

As Black Belt Eagle Scout, Paul, who is of Swinomish ancestry, an Indigenous population of western Washington State, became active in Portland's mid-2010s indie rock boom. During the pandemic, Paul returned to her family in the Swinomish Indian Tribal Community on Fidalgo Island in Puget Sound.

The Land, The Water, The Sky chronicles that journey, featuring Paul's delicate singing voice, stark and minimal electric guitar work, surprising additions of acoustic instruments and surging dynamics that ebb and flow like tidal waters.

The project began life as an EP, but the record's producer, Takiya Reed from the Australian Indigenous metal band Divide and Dissolve, urged Paul to flesh it out into a full-length album.

Following Reed's suggestion, Paul searched through incomplete thoughts and assorted fragments of music accumulated over time, and a storyline emerged. She had enough material for a full-length release.

The album starts with the driving-rain, minor-key "My Blood Runs Through this Land," Paul's singing voice submerging at points and emerging at others as drums and cymbals join the fray and a searching electric guitar line skims the horizon.

Many moments of peace are to be found on The Land, The Water, The Sky, such as "Salmon Stinta" or "On the River," while the appropriately enough titled "Fancy Dance" is among the record's most conventionally structured indie rock tunes, and a sweet tribute to movement.

A bit like experimental singer-songwriter Liz Harris of Grouper, Paul's voice seems filtered through a rain-flecked window pane. Where Harris stays indoors, Paul chooses to embrace the storm.

Throughout it all, Paul seems to ruminate on love, the importance of home and the power of nature as well as embracing the interior journey through exterior forces while always trusting your instincts.

As a girl, Paul — who plays guitar, drums and piano and writes her music on her own before she brings in accompaniment — learned the traditional drumming of her Swinomish people. Her music often has that essential drive to it. When the songs translate to a full guitar-bass-drums band arrangement, such as they will be performed in Eugene, that tone becomes something heavier.

"Sometimes my songs are really quiet and delicate, but when I have people play them live everything just gets amplified in a way," Paul tells Eugene Weekly in a phone call.

"I tend to write about certain periods of my life," Paul says, such as the move back home to northwest Washington.

On that note, "This record is about a journey home. Through that journey there's a lot of healing and a lot of love," Paul says. "At first it was the journey, it just kept changing. And it ended up being this record." ■

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): Sometimes, I give you suggestions that may, if you carry them out, jostle your routines and fluster your allies. But after trying out the new approaches for a short time, you may chicken out and revert to old habits. That's understandable! It can be difficult to change your life. Here's an example. What if I encourage you to cancel your appointments and wander out into the wilderness to discuss your dreams with the birds? And what if, during your adventure, you are flooded with exhilarating yearnings for freedom? And then you decide to divest yourself of desires that other people want you to have and instead revive and give boosts to desires that you want yourself to have? Will you actually follow through with brave practical actions that transform your relationship with your deepest longings?

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): You have done all you can for now to resolve and expunge stale, messy karma — some of which was left over from the old days and old ways. There may come a time in the future when you will have more cleansing to do, but you have now earned the right to be as free from your past and as free from your conditioning as you have ever been. APRIL FOOL! I lied. In fact, you still need to spend a bit more time resolving and expunging stale, messy karma. But you're almost done!

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): Businessman Robert Bigelow hopes to eventually begin renting luxurious rooms in space. For $1.7 million per night, travelers will enjoy accommodations he provides on his orbiting hotel, 200 miles above Earth's surface. Are you interested? I bet more Geminis will be signing up for this exotic trip than any other sign. You're likely to be the journeyers most excited by the prospect of sailing along at 17,000 miles per hour and witnessing 16 sunsets and sunrises every 24 hours. APRIL FOOL! In fact, you Geminis are quite capable of getting the extreme variety you crave and need right here on the planet's surface. And during the coming weeks, you will be even more skilled than usual at doing just that.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): The coming weeks will be a favorable time for you to become the overlord of your own fiefdom, or seize control of a new territory and declare yourself chieftain, or overthrow the local hierarchy and install yourself as the sovereign ruler of all you survey. APRIL FOOL! I was metaphorically exaggerating a bit — but just a bit. I do in fact believe now is an excellent phase to increase your clout, boost your influence and express your leadership. Be as kind you can be, of course, but also be rousingly mighty and fervent.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): In his poem "The Something," Charles Simic writes, "Here come my night thoughts on crutches, returning from studying the heavens. What they thought about stayed the same. Stayed immense and incomprehensible." According to my analysis of the astrological omens, you Leos will have much the same experience in the coming weeks. So there's no use in even hoping or trying to expand your vision. APRIL FOOL! I lied. The truth is, you will not have Simic's experience. Just the opposite. When your night thoughts return from studying the heavens, they will be full of exuberant, inspiring energy. (And what exactly are "night thoughts"? They are bright insights you discover in the darkness.)

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): If there will ever come a time when you will find a gold bullion bar on the ground while strolling around town, it will be soon. Similarly, if you are destined to buy a winning $10 million lottery ticket or inherit a diamond mine in Botswana, that blessing will arrive soon. APRIL FOOL! I was exaggerating a bit. The truth is, I suspect you are now extra likely to attract new resources and benefits, though not on the scale of gold bullion, lottery winnings and diamond mines.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): Do you have a muse, Libra? In my opinion, all of us need and deserve at least one muse, even if we're not creative artists. A muse can be a spirit or hero or ally who inspires us, no matter what work and play we do. A muse may call our attention to important truths we are ignoring or point us in the direction of exciting future possibilities. According to my astrological analysis, you are now due for a muse upgrade. If you don't have one, get one — or even more. If you already have a relationship with a muse, ask more from it. Nurture it. Take it to the next level.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): Dear Valued Employee: Our records show you haven't used any vacation time over the past 100 years. As you may know, workers get three weeks of paid leave per year or else receive pay in lieu of time off. One added week is granted for every five years of service. So please, sometime soon, either take 9,400 days off work or notify our office, and your next paycheck will reflect payment of $8,277,432, including pay and interest for the past 1,200 months. APRIL FOOL! Everything I just said was an exaggeration. But there is a grain of truth in it. The coming weeks should bring you a nice surprise or two concerning your job.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): Sagittarian poet and artist William Blake (1757-1827) was a hard-working visionary prophet with an extravagant imagination. His contemporaries considered him a freaky eccentric, though today we regard him as a genius. I invite you to enjoy your own personal version of a Blake-like phase in the coming weeks. It's a perfect time to dynamically explore your idiosyncratic inclinations and creative potentials. Be bold, even brazen, as you celebrate what makes you unique. BUT WAIT! Although everything I just said is true, I must add a caveat: You don't necessarily need to be a freaky eccentric to honor your deepest, most authentic truths and longings.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): Some of my friends disapprove of cosmetic surgery. I remind them that many cultures throughout history have engaged in body modification. In parts of Africa and Borneo, for example, people stretch their ears. Some Balinese people get their teeth filed. Women of the Indigenous Kyan people in Thailand elongate their necks using brass coils. Anyway, Capricorn, this is my way of letting you know that the coming weeks would be a favorable time to change your body. APRIL FOOL! It's not my place to advise you about whether and how to reshape your body. Instead, my job is to encourage you to deepen and refine how your mind understands and treats your body. And now is an excellent time to do that.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): I invite you to make a big change. I believe it's crucial if you hope to place yourself in maximum alignment with current cosmic rhythms. Here's my idea: Start calling yourself by the name "Genius." You could even use it instead of the first name you have used all these years. Tell everyone that from now on, they should address you as "Genius." APRIL FOOL! I don't really think you should make the switch to Genius. But I do believe you will be extra smart and ultra-wise in the coming weeks, so it wouldn't be totally outrageous to refer to yourself as "Genius."

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): Your body comprises 30 trillion human cells and 39 trillion microbial cells, including the bacteria that live within you. And in my astrological estimation, those 69 trillion life forms are vibrating in sweet harmony with all the money in the world. Amazing! Because of this remarkable alignment, you now have the potential to get richer quicker. Good economic luck is swirling in your vicinity. Brilliant financial intuitions are likely to well up in you. The Money God is far more amenable than usual to your prayers. APRIL FOOL! I was exaggerating a bit. But I do believe you now have extra ability to prime your cash flow.

SAVAGE LOVE

BY DAN SAVAGE

Dear Readers: I hosted an "Ask Me Anything" session on my website — Savage.Love — last week, where I answered as many reader/listener questions as I could get to in 90 minutes. Here are some of the questions I didn't get to before the buzzer sounded...

30s lesbian in a non-monogamous sexless marriage here. Do you think it's ever possible to re-spark a sexual connection if both partners are open to it? The context: I love good sex and have had incredibly hot sexual connections with other partners, but sex in my 10-year relationship with my wife has always been infrequent, i.e., two to three times a year. She's generally a very tired, low-energy person, and she's so low-energy during sex that she's literally fallen asleep mid-sex on a lot of occasions. This has done a number on my self-esteem, and the last decade of my life has been characterized by loneliness, yearning, and dissatisfaction. And lately, resentment has crept in. You might tell me to go have amazing sex with other partners, but my wife is verrrry controlling of those connections and tends to treat me with a cold shoulder when I get involved with someone else. I've come to embrace the truth that this is not enough for me for the rest of my lifetime. I'm not sure how to dig my relationship out of this dynamic. We've been in therapy together for four years and although she says she wants the same exciting sex life that I want, nothing has changed.

— Help A Lesbian Out

One of the superstar commenters at Savage.Love — BiDanFan — got to your question before I did, HALO, and I liked her response: "She says she wants the same exciting sex life that you want but her actions say the opposite. She only wants sex once or twice a YEAR, and doesn't want you to have sex with anyone else. This isn't fair. Four years of therapy haven't solved anything. Your wife is paying lip service to wanting to re-spark your sexual connection so you won't leave her. But how many decades of your life will you spend like this? But don't go have amazing sex with other people yet! Divorce your wife, then go have amazing sex with other people." That's good advice — BiDanFan always gives good advice — but personally, HALO, I don't think you have to wait until your divorce is final before you go have amazing sex with someone else. Hell, I don't think you have to wait until you've even initiated a divorce. Your marriage is open and non-monogamous, which means you're already allowed to get sex elsewhere. So, why wait? And if your wife gives you the cold shoulder — if she punishes you for getting sex elsewhere after giving you permission to get sex elsewhere — that's something you should bring up with your therapist. Zooming out for a second: you can't re-spark something that never sparked in the first place. Whatever your relationship is, whatever happiness it brought and still brings you, it has never been defined by a strong sexual connection. You need to stop feeling guilty and/or being made to feel guilty about the accommodation your wife made (permission to get it elsewhere) that made it possible for you to stay in this marriage as long as you already have. And if your wife can't stop trying to make you feel guilty — by punishing you with that cold shoulder — you'll have to make up your mind not to feel guilty.

I think it's time to issue the dreaded ultimatum: "It's open on my terms — it's open and joyful — or it's over." Your wife may pick "over," and that may be the best outcome for both of you. But she may decide... once she realizes she can't control you with her moods and/or run out the life-expectancy-clock in therapy... to be happy for you when you get it elsewhere.

My partner of four years — he's male, age 59 — recently started having trouble maintaining an erection. He and I have discussed it, we're both still having a great time, and he's going to bring it up with his doctor soon. Any tips for being a supportive and enthusiastic partner when he goes soft? Do I switch up whatever activity I'm doing when it happens? Or do I carry on? How can I be a better partner in these moments?

— Having Anxieties Regarding Dick

If your partner goes soft while he's fucking you, HARD, you obviously can't carry on. And if he goes soft while you're sucking him, well, blowjobs are a lot of work and sucking a soft cock is (usually, not always) wasted labor. The better idea would be for you to pivot — I mean the plural you, the two of you together, without sighs or apologies — to an activity that takes the focus off his dick and that relieves him of the pressure to get hard again right away or at all. He goes down on you, mutual masturbation, you bust out a vibrator, you could even borrow a page from the lesbians and get a strap-on dildo.
